PREPARED FOR
Lightchain AI community consideration

Lightchain has built meaningful technical foundations. The next challenge is to make the project easier for developers, users, partners, and the broader market to understand, evaluate, and adopt.

The Case for Marketing Support

The opportunity. Over the next six months, Lightchain can translate technical progress into stronger adoption, visibility, market participation, and ecosystem growth. This means expanding developer activity, community awareness, partner interest, and market visibility while building a stronger foundation for liquidity and future exchange opportunities.

The approach. Use measurable, proof-driven marketing with clear deliverables, regular reporting, and monthly or milestone-based terms. This limits upfront token sales and gives the community continuing visibility into performance.

What Success Looks Like

- Reach the top 100 by market capitalization as the primary six-month ambition, using an agreed ranking source and measurement date.
- Treat the top 50 as a six-to-nine-month stretch goal, dependent on adoption, listings, liquidity, and broader market conditions.
- Generate measurable trading activity around new listings, with emphasis on sustained volume rather than temporary listing spikes.
- Increase active builders, deployed projects, ecosystem partnerships, qualified community participation, and earned media visibility.
- Establish clear baselines early so campaign progress can be reported credibly and consistently.

Measurement principle: Market rank, price, and volume are strategic ambitions, not agency guarantees. Lunar should be evaluated primarily on the measurable activities and outcomes it can directly influence.

Why External Support Now

Lightchain has reached an important stage. The technical foundation is taking shape; the next challenge is making a complex solution understandable, credible, and relevant to the audiences most likely to build on, use, support, or participate in it.

Exchange conditions have changed. With BitMart winding down, future listings require coordinated narrative support, credible proof points, community participation, and sustained visibility. A listing alone does not guarantee lasting market interest.

Community-led efforts have maintained awareness and demonstrated commitment, but they have operated without the resources, coordination, measurement, PR relationships, and sustained execution of a professional campaign. External support can unite messaging, content, PR, KOL outreach, listing support, and ecosystem growth into one coordinated program.

Three Priority Audiences

Market participants. Lead with verifiable milestones, on-chain activity, ecosystem development, governance, and the listing roadmap. Communications should remain factual and avoid price predictions or implied returns.

Builders. Show that developers can build and succeed on Lightchain. Turn credible projects into public case studies supported by documentation, grants, technical assistance, and builder-focused channels.

Institutional and strategic partners. Emphasize legal clarity, governance, operational transparency, technical reliability, and verifiable use cases. For this audience, credibility and evidence are the foundation.

Evaluation and Selection

The Marketing Committee conducted a structured evaluation to identify the partner best positioned to translate Lightchain's technical progress into measurable adoption, visibility, and ecosystem growth. Firms were assessed on relevant experience, strategic approach, team capacity, execution process, proposal quality, measurement capabilities, commercial structure, and risk.

The recommendation was based on overall strategic fit and execution capability, not simply cost. Monthly or milestone-based terms were also prioritized to reduce upfront treasury pressure, limit concentrated token sales, and allow performance to be reviewed throughout the engagement.

Recommendation: Lunar Strategy

The Marketing Committee recommends engaging Lunar Strategy for an initial six-month program. Lunar offered the strongest overall combination of crypto-sector experience, strategic fit, team capability, integrated execution, and workable commercial terms.

The engagement should focus on turning Lightchain's technical progress into clear market understanding and measurable participation—not short-term hype. The program should integrate narrative development, content, PR, KOL engagement, listing support, builder growth, and community participation, with transparent reporting against agreed baselines and KPIs.

CORE PRINCIPLE

Success means making Lightchain easier to understand, trust, build on, and participate in—then proving that progress through measurable results.

- Agree on baseline measurements, KPI definitions, reporting cadence, and data sources before campaign work begins.
- Keep community communications factual, accessible, and transparent about what marketing can and cannot control.
- Preserve community participation and oversight throughout the engagement.
